

WILL CONSIDER TAX ADJUSTMENT

Mortuary

Irvin. Funeral services for Miss Mamie Beatrice Irvin, 20 years old, who died about 2:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon at her home at 1144 North Denver will be held at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon from the Irvin Mortuary, shaped with Rev. Meade just officiating. She is survived by her stepfather, R. H. Walter, her mother, Mrs. Minnie Walter and two sisters, Miss Marie Irvin of Tulsa and Miss Mable Ladley of Henryetta, Indian territory will take place in Rose

Ways and Means Committee to Get Busy With Opening Session

HOUSTON HAS HIS SAY

Urges Great Caution in Readjustment but Believes Budget Can Be Lightened.

See correspondence.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 22.—Chairman Fordney of the ways and means committee will call that body together as soon as Congress reassembles to decide, in conjunction with the meeting committee of the House, what the republican leaders, whether to attempt readjustments of income and excess-profits taxes at the session or await the expected budgetary session of the new Congress in the spring.

Secretary Houston of the treasury in the meantime will have sent to the president and through him to Congress his annual report in which he will offer suggestions upon the subject of revision of the taxes.

Secretary Houston is dependent upon the earnest suggestions he has heretofore made for early simplification of the tax law, regarded by him as vital.

In previous communications to Chairman Fordney, Secretary Houston wrote that if action should be suspended until the autumn or winter of 1921, income and profit taxes must continue to be collected on the basis of the present law until the day of the calendar year 1922, and the case of some taxpayers on the so-called fiscal-year basis, until the six months of the calendar year 1923. He added that he "could not conceive such delay without the gravest apprehension."

One significant paragraph in his letter to the ways and means committee chairman, which is of immediate interest to taxpayers, was this: "It would be manifestly unsafe to reduce now the income and profit taxes to be collected in the calendar years 1920 and 1921, but I can see nothing in the financial prospects for the year 1922, and thereafter, which would make impossible or unsafe the very modest reduction involved in the plan of simplification hereinafter presented."

While departing the wisdom of attempting to reduce now the income and profit taxes to be collected in the current year and in 1921, the secretary wanted provision made at once for the simplification or fundamental modification, or reduction of excess profits tax "at the earliest possible future date," which apparently he set for the calendar year 1922. He pointed out that it would be unwise and imprudent to make a beneficial modification of the tax law retroactive, or even to delay its adoption and announcement until the time it is to take effect.

The conclusion drawn by congressmen from the secretary's previous opinions and recommendations is that no instant or near-future relief can be expected, but that the business world ought to know as soon as possible when it may be looked for in 1922.

If Secretary Houston has found anything in prospective revenue conditions and necessary outlay to warrant modifying his opinion, he will communicate it in his message, and upon the members of the ways and means committee will devolve the responsibility of acceding to or going beyond his recommendations.

Conservative men in congress do not see hope for material relief from the burden of excess profit taxes at once, owing to the state of the revenues and the demands of administration of government, but concur with Secretary Houston that business ought to know when it can hope for a partial lifting of the burdens and how it is to be done.

Secretary Houston has therefore directed the attention of the ways and means committee, in a letter to Chairman Fordney, which parades official character, to type facts as follows as indisputable, as follows:

"First, the application or calculation of the excess profit tax is so complex that it has proved impossible to keep up to date the administrative work of audit and assessment.

"Second, the profits tax is confined to a small fraction in number of the business income of the country. Personal service corporations, sole proprietors and other forms of trust organizations are exempt from the tax. If the principle be sound, it should be extended to all forms of business organizations, a proposal which administrative considerations alone stamp as impracticable either in the present or any future period near enough in the world's considering."

Pointing out that the outstanding feature of the present system of taxation of business income is the fact that two systems of taxation are employed, Secretary Houston directed attention to the fact that corporations pay the profits tax and normal income tax, while their stockholders pay surtax on dividends distributed profits, but nothing in respect to the undistributed profits.

There should be one system and two systems of income taxation applicable to persons engaged in business," Secretary Houston contended. "The essential thing is to simplify the excess profits tax and create a uniquely opportune moment to remedy a deeply rooted defect in our system of income taxation at a time when such taxation represents simplification and relief, not further complexity and heavier burdens."

O. C. Man Kills Self. —
OKLAHOMA CITY, Nov. 22.—H. H. Mottier, formerly of Terre Haute, Ind., was found dead in his room at a local hotel today. A. W. McWilliams, coroner, pronounced his death a suicide. Orders found in his possession indicated he was a member of various lodges, clubs and church organizations of Terre Haute. Mottier had been a resident of this city for about a year.

CROPS STANDING, HARVEST STOPPED

Cotton Left Unpicked Because Gathering Cost Equals Income.

C. H. Howard of the mortgage loan department of the Exchange Trust company reports that the cotton crop is not being gathered in the state and that whole fields of cotton are going to waste in many sections. He gives as the reason that cotton pickers are asking as much for picking as the cotton will sell on the market.

From Muskogee county the report comes: "With the amount of cotton carried over from 1919, and the large surplus of 1920 on hand, unless they diversify and raise cotton only as a surplus crop, they will likely have this same condition next fall. The landlord has suffered loss than the owner, and in some instances has received fair revenue when the land was part in wheat, oats and corn. The cotton yielded so heavily, even at a price below the cost of production, say four cents for seed cotton, will pay the landlord $1 per acre, for the good lands are averaging a bale to the acre."

Howard says from every nook and corner of the state come identical reports and in most cases the reports indicate that considerable damage has been done to corn, especially in the overflow districts. Considerable gathering of other crops is going on at this time, but the price seems to have almost reached the bottom. Cotton is selling from 90 to 10 cents a pound, and seed cotton is selling for 3 cents a pound.

Elks' Sweet Cider Feast Arranged for Next Dance

Do you enjoy sweet cider?

Every Elk does. That is the reason why Jack Gillard, chairman of Elks entertainment committee has arranged for a copious supply of apple juice for refreshment at the Thanksgiving night dance at the Elks club.

It is an annual affair to which every Elk always looks forward in pleasant anticipation.

M'GRAW VISITS IN TULSA

Republican Politician of Ponca City Spends Two Days With Friends

Jesse L. McGraw, Ponca City's leading citizen and a prominent Republican politician in Oklahoma, spent Monday and Tuesday in Tulsa renewing his acquaintances and visiting with business associates and friends.

Although in no way officially connected with the presidential campaign, Mr. McGraw spent the last two days of the campaign visit of the national headquarters of the republican campaign committee in New York rendering voluntary service.

While departing the wisdom of attempting to reduce now the income and profit taxes to be collected in the current year and in 1921, the secretary wanted provision made at once for the simplification or fundamental modification, or reduction of excess profits tax "at the earliest possible future date," which apparently he set for the calendar year 1922. He pointed out that it would be unwise and imprudent to make a beneficial modification of the tax law retroactive, or even to delay its adoption and announcement until the time it is to take effect.

The conclusion drawn by congressmen from the secretary's previous opinions and recommendations is that no instant or near-future relief can be expected, but that the business world ought to know as soon as possible when it may be looked for in 1922.

If Secretary Houston has found anything in prospective revenue conditions and necessary outlay to warrant modifying his opinion, he will communicate it in his message, and upon the members of the ways and means committee will devolve the responsibility of acceding to or going beyond his recommendations.

Conservative men in congress do not see hope for material relief from the burden of excess profit taxes at once, owing to the state of the revenues and the demands of administration of government, but concur with Secretary Houston that business ought to know when it can hope for a partial lifting of the burdens and how it is to be done.

The conclusion drawn by congressmen from the secretary's previous opinions and recommendations is that no instant or near-future relief can be expected, but that the business world ought to know as soon as possible when it may be looked for in 1922.

If Secretary Houston has found anything in prospective revenue conditions and necessary outlay to warrant modifying his opinion, he will communicate it in his message, and upon the members of the ways and means committee will devolve the responsibility of acceding to or going beyond his recommendations.

Conservative men in congress do not see hope for material relief from the burden of excess profit taxes at once, owing to the state of the revenues and the demands of administration of government, but concur with Secretary Houston that business ought to know when it can hope for a partial lifting of the burdens and how it is to be done.

Secretary Houston has therefore directed the attention of the ways and means committee, in a letter to Chairman Fordney, which parades official character, to type facts as follows as indisputable, as follows:

"First, the application or calculation of the excess profit tax is so complex that it has proved impossible to keep up to date the administrative work of audit and assessment.

"Second, the profits tax is confined to a small fraction in number of the business income of the country. Personal service corporations, sole proprietors and other forms of trust organizations are exempt from the tax. If the principle be sound, it should be extended to all forms of business organizations, a proposal which administrative considerations alone stamp as impracticable either in the present or any future period near enough in the world's considering."

Pointing out that the outstanding feature of the present system of taxation of business income is the fact that two systems of taxation are employed, Secretary Houston directed attention to the fact that corporations pay the profits tax and normal income tax, while their stockholders pay surtax on dividends distributed profits, but nothing in respect to the undistributed profits.

There should be one system and two systems of income taxation applicable to persons engaged in business," Secretary Houston contended. "The essential thing is to simplify the excess profits tax and create a uniquely opportune moment to remedy a deeply rooted defect in our system of income taxation at a time when such taxation represents simplification and relief, not further complexity and heavier burdens."

O. C. Man Kills Self. —
OKLAHOMA CITY, Nov. 22.—H. H. Mottier, formerly of Terre Haute, Ind., was found dead in his room at a local hotel today. A. W. McWilliams, coroner, pronounced his death a suicide. Orders found in his possession indicated he was a member of various lodges, clubs and church organizations of Terre Haute. Mottier had been a resident of this city for about a year.

WILL CONSIDER TAX ADJUSTMENT

Ways and Means Committee to Get Busy With Opening Session

HOUSTON HAS HIS SAY

Urges Great Caution in Readjustment but Believes Budget Can Be Lightened.

See correspondence.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 22.—Chairman Fordney of the ways and means committee will call that body together as soon as Congress reassembles to decide, in conjunction with the meeting committee of the House, what the republican leaders, whether to attempt readjustments of income and excess-profits taxes at the session or await the expected budgetary session of the new Congress in the spring.

Secretary Houston of the treasury in the meantime will have sent to the president and through him to Congress his annual report in which he will offer suggestions upon the subject of revision of the taxes.

Secretary Houston is dependent upon the earnest suggestions he has heretofore made for early simplification of the tax law, regarded by him as vital.

In previous communications to Chairman Fordney, Secretary Houston wrote that if action should be suspended until the autumn or winter of 1921, income and profit taxes must continue to be collected on the basis of the present law until the day of the calendar year 1922, and the case of some taxpayers on the so-called fiscal-year basis, until the six months of the calendar year 1923. He added that he "could not conceive such delay without the gravest apprehension."

One significant paragraph in his letter to the ways and means committee chairman, which is of immediate interest to taxpayers, was this: "It would be manifestly unsafe to reduce now the income and profit taxes to be collected in the calendar years 1920 and 1921, but I can see nothing in the financial prospects for the year 1922, and thereafter, which would make impossible or unsafe the very modest reduction involved in the plan of simplification hereinafter presented."

While departing the wisdom of attempting to reduce now the income and profit taxes to be collected in the current year and in 1921, the secretary wanted provision made at once for the simplification or fundamental modification, or reduction of excess profits tax "at the earliest possible future date," which apparently he set for the calendar year 1922. He pointed out that it would be unwise and imprudent to make a beneficial modification of the tax law retroactive, or even to delay its adoption and announcement until the time it is to take effect.

The conclusion drawn by congressmen from the secretary's previous opinions and recommendations is that no instant or near-future relief can be expected, but that the business world ought to know as soon as possible when it may be looked for in 1922.

If Secretary Houston has found anything in prospective revenue conditions and necessary outlay to warrant modifying his opinion, he will communicate it in his message, and upon the members of the ways and means committee will devolve the responsibility of acceding to or going beyond his recommendations.

Conservative men in congress do not see hope for material relief from the burden of excess profit taxes at once, owing to the state of the revenues and the demands of administration of government, but concur with Secretary Houston that business ought to know when it can hope for a partial lifting of the burdens and how it is to be done.

The conclusion drawn by congressmen from the secretary's previous opinions and recommendations is that no instant or near-future relief can be expected, but that the business world ought to know as soon as possible when it may be looked for in 1922.

If Secretary Houston has found anything in prospective revenue conditions and necessary outlay to warrant modifying his opinion, he will communicate it in his message, and upon the members of the ways and means committee will devolve the responsibility of acceding to or going beyond his recommendations.

Conservative men in congress do not see hope for material relief from the burden of excess profit taxes at once, owing to the state of the revenues and the demands of administration of government, but concur with Secretary Houston that business ought to know when it can hope for a partial lifting of the burdens and how it is to be done.

Secretary Houston has therefore directed the attention of the ways and means committee, in a letter to Chairman Fordney, which parades official character, to type facts as follows as follows:

"First, the application or calculation of the excess profit tax is so complex that it has proved impossible to keep up to date the administrative work of audit and assessment.

"Second, the profits tax is confined to a small fraction in number of the business income of the country. Personal service corporations, sole proprietors and other forms of trust organizations are exempt from the tax. If the principle be sound, it should be extended to all forms of business organizations, a proposal which administrative considerations alone stamp as impracticable either in the present or any future period near enough in the world's considering."

Pointing out that the outstanding feature of the present system of taxation of business income is the fact that two systems of taxation are employed, Secretary Houston directed attention to the fact that corporations pay the profits tax and normal income tax, while their stockholders pay surtax on dividends distributed profits, but nothing in respect to the undistributed profits.

There should be one system and two systems of income taxation applicable to persons engaged in business," Secretary Houston contended. "The essential thing is to simplify the excess profits tax and create a uniquely opportune moment to remedy a deeply rooted defect in our system of income taxation at a time when such taxation represents simplification and relief, not further complexity and heavier burdens."

O. C. Man Kills Self. —
OKLAHOMA CITY, Nov. 22.—H. H. Mottier, formerly of Terre Haute, Ind., was found dead in his room at a local hotel today. A. W. McWilliams, coroner, pronounced his death a suicide. Orders found in his possession indicated he was a member of various lodges, clubs and church organizations of Terre Haute. Mottier had been a resident of this city for about a year.

MORTUARY

Funeral services for Miss Mamie Beatrice Irvin, 20 years old, who died about 2:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon at her home at 1144 North Denver will be held at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon from the Irvin Mortuary, shaped with Rev. Meade just officiating. She is survived by her stepfather, R. H. Walter, her mother, Mrs. Minnie Walter and two sisters, Miss Marie Irvin of Tulsa and Miss Mable Ladley of Henryetta, Indian territory will take place in Rose

Ways and Means Committee to Get Busy With Opening Session

HOUSTON HAS HIS SAY

Urges Great Caution in Readjustment but Believes Budget Can Be Lightened.

See correspondence.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 22.—Chairman Fordney of the ways and means committee will call that body together as soon as Congress reassembles to decide, in conjunction with the meeting committee of the House, what the republican leaders, whether to attempt readjustments of income and excess-profits taxes at the session or await the expected budgetary session of the new Congress in the spring.

Secretary Houston of the treasury in the meantime will have sent to the president and through him to Congress his annual report in which he will offer suggestions upon the subject of revision of the taxes.

Secretary Houston is dependent upon the earnest suggestions he has heretofore made for early simplification of the tax law, regarded by him as vital.

In previous communications to Chairman Fordney, Secretary Houston wrote that if action should be suspended until the autumn or winter of 1921, income and profit taxes must continue to be collected on the basis of the present law until the day of the calendar year 1922, and the case of some taxpayers on the so-called fiscal-year basis, until the six months of the calendar year 1923. He added that he "could not conceive such delay without the gravest apprehension."

One significant paragraph in his letter to the ways and means committee chairman, which is of immediate interest to taxpayers, was this: "It would be manifestly unsafe to reduce now the income and profit taxes to be collected in the calendar years 1920 and 1921, but I can see nothing in the financial prospects for the year 1922, and thereafter, which would make impossible or unsafe the very modest reduction involved in the plan of simplification hereinafter presented."

While departing the wisdom of attempting to reduce now the income and profit taxes to be collected in the current year and in 1921, the secretary wanted provision made at once for the simplification or fundamental modification, or reduction of excess profits tax "at the earliest possible future date," which apparently he set for the calendar year 1922. He pointed out that it would be unwise and imprudent to make a beneficial modification of the tax law retroactive, or even to delay its adoption and announcement until the time it is to take effect.

The conclusion drawn by congressmen from the secretary's previous opinions and recommendations is that no instant or near-future relief can be expected, but that the business world ought to know as soon as possible when it may be looked for in 1922.

If Secretary Houston has found anything in prospective revenue conditions and necessary outlay to warrant modifying his opinion, he will communicate it in his message, and upon the members of the ways and means committee will devolve the responsibility of acceding to or going beyond his recommendations.

Conservative men in congress do not see hope for material relief from the burden of excess profit taxes at once, owing to the state of the revenues and the demands of administration of government, but concur with Secretary Houston that business ought to know when it can hope for a partial lifting of the burdens and how it is to be done.

The conclusion drawn by congressmen from the secretary's previous opinions and recommendations is that no instant or near-future relief can be expected, but that the business world ought to know as soon as possible when it may be looked for in 1922.

If Secretary Houston has found anything in prospective revenue conditions and necessary outlay to warrant modifying his opinion, he will communicate it in his message, and upon the members of the ways and means committee will devolve the responsibility of acceding to or going beyond his recommendations.

Conservative men in congress do not see hope for material relief from the burden of excess profit taxes at once, owing to the state of the revenues and the demands of administration of government, but concur with Secretary Houston that business ought to know when it can hope for a partial lifting of the burdens and how it is to be done.